What I have learned

- I have loved all my time in my internship, and it has grown my passion for wanting to become a teacher. During my time in Mrs. Godfrey's Kindergarten class, I have been able to establish relationships with the students and teachers around the school. Mrs. Godfrey has also shown me a lot of things in her room that I would love to use in my own classroom, when I become a teacher.

What I have learned

- I have observed many things in Mrs. Godfreys class. The first thing that I would love to implicate in my class would be having a morning meeting. In the morning meeting they greet each other by going around in a circle and saying good morning to each other. Then the students all help write the morning message on the board which consist of key words such as boys and girls, and good morning. The special helper is also announced, and they write which special they are going to today. This is beneficial to the students because they can learn speaking skills and learn to write key words.

What I have learned

- Another thing that I would love to do in my classroom is centers. At the front of the classroom there is a chart with all the students' names on it and all the centers on it. There are 9 centers in total such as, computers, housekeeping, sensory, playdough, blocks, puzzles, iPad, writing, and library. The students go to one center a day and then rotate the next day. I believe this is beneficial for the students because it allows students to apply skills and engage in different ways.
