

Work Based Learning

Ciella Sosa

Spending this semester with Mrs. Hudson's class has taught me many things about being a teacher.

What have I learned?

One thing I've learned from this internship has been how to make learning fun. Mrs. Hudson uses hands on activities and fun songs to help the kids better understand letter sounds, positional words, and many other skills.

What have I learned?

Another thing I've learned is how to keep a classroom organized and structured.

Structure is important so the students have easier transitional time, and it keeps the class organized.

What have I learned?

I've learned how to help students communicate using their words. At 4 years old, It's hard for the kids to communicate their feelings and needs.

When the students became frustrated if they weren't understanding, I've learned ways to help them calm down and focus.

What have I learned?

Most importantly, I've learned that it's important to remain patient with every child. Understanding that every child learns differently and embracing that while teaching and creating lessons. The children are still learning how to adapt in a classroom setting so remaining calm and patient is something that I've learned is important to the children's development.
